This paper provides an introduction to algorithms for fundamental linear algebra problems on various parallel computer architectures, with the emphasis on distributed-memory MIMD machines. To illustrate the basic concepts and key issues, we consider the problem of parallel solution of a nonsingular linear system by Gauss-

Abstract. A parallel method for globally minimizing a linear program with an additional reverse convex constraint is proposed which combines the outer approximation technique and the cutting plane method.

Graph connectivity is a fundamental problem in computer science with many important applications. Sequentially, connectivity can be done in linear work easily using breadth-first search or depth-first search. There have been many parallel algorithms for connectivity, however the simpler parallel
