Pharmaceutical Preformulation and Formulation | A

Pharmaceutical formulation could be simply defined as the design of dosage forms. However, this definition is too simplistic, since it does not reflect the complexity of developing pharmaceutical dosage forms. This can explain why it is easy to find references to the operation of formulation, but the definitions that describe the process are rare. Prista et al. [1], which addressed this issue ...

Pharmaceutical formulation development requires the optimization of formulation and process variables. These relationships are difficult to model using classical methods. One of the difficulties in the quantitative approach to formulation design is the understanding of relationships between causal factors and individual pharmaceutical responses. Furthermore, a desirable formulation for one ...
